If you see the world from the viewpoint of a military soldier, that is going to color your opinion of war. If you see the world through the eyes of a mother, you will have different thoughts about maternity than if you view the world through the eyes of a father. If you see the action from the point of view of a cop, then you will have a different viewpoint than if you see the action from the point of view of a reporter. I would also say that the way you react to a book is as important as the book itself. How you view a book is part of the book. Point of View can make or break a book. Two different books on the same topic could tell the same story from two different points of view. It is important that you look at the book and read it through. Then when you get to the end, stop and think about how the author presented the information. The book could be told from a lawyer's point of view, a worker's point of view, a firefighter's point of view, or any number of other points of view. The story could also be told from a scientist's point of view. Look at how the author tells the story. Is it in a straight line, or does it meander? Does the author talk about things that are obvious or does the author talk about things that need to be pointed out? Try looking at the author's point of view. Notice how the author treats the characters.Q: Storing data into text file in C++ I have a list of items from which I'm storing data into a text file. The diagnosis of ventilator-associated pneumonia (VAP) was prospectively studied in 55 mechanically ventilated patients. Microbiologic samples and chest radiographs were obtained on days 1 to 3, and bacterial cultures and chest radiographs were repeated when clinical signs or laboratory results suggested the onset of pneumonia. Eight of the 16 patients in whom the diagnosis of VAP was made by radiologic criteria alone had negative microbiologic results for organisms known to be capable of causing pneumonia. Antibody responses to at least one of the five organisms commonly associated with nosocomial pneumonia were determined in patients with the diagnosis of VAP and in patients in whom the diagnosis of VAP was excluded by radiologic criteria. There was no significant association between the presence or absence of antibody and subsequent development of VAP. We conclude that antibody responses to intracellular organisms or invasive fungal infections are not helpful in the diagnosis of VAP.Q: Can
