Drive, Fun, Co-op Jump in and drive a strange looking car across an island! Go for the high score or share the fun with a friend. Fun For All Ages We know parents and children will have a blast with this game. A Clean VR Experience There are no special features (in-game), just pure flying and driving. Drive Solo, or in local multiplayer mode Drive solo or take the wheel with your friends! Co-op Game Play Local multi player game play for true competitiveness. No Controller Required! Fly and drive without a controller! Wet Dreams Fly and Drive in an awesome VR experience on the stormy island! The Stormy Island Landscape is an awesome VR landscape for driving and flying in, and it looks absolutely gorgeous. The reason why this is a VR exclusive landscape is because there are no obstructions. There is nothing but pure ocean and the landscape looks great. The biggest problem with this landscape is in regards to controllers. There are no accelerometer controls in this landscape. However, there is only one accelerometer input, which is the front facing one. This means that this landscape cannot be played through a motion tracker. The game can only be played with a controller. The game plays itself as a single player or local multiplayer game, and it plays very well, especially when played with three people. The controls are easy to use, as the game is very simple. There are two buttons that you must press to fly. There is one button that you must hold to rotate the camera, and the other button will fly you forward when you release it. The controls are extremely easy to learn and master. The fun factor in this game is the ability to play locally as a group of three people, as the controls are incredibly easy to master. This game uses a realistic camera so that you can see the ocean as you fly through the air. The game also uses some very cool special effects such as rain, storms, lightning, and a giant wave. You can also see the beautiful high seas as you fly by them. The camera is so realistic that when you see the ocean your body does not feel like you are inside a cardboard box. The camera is also sensitive to things on the ground, and other objects that are in the air and don't float to the top of the ocean. This means that you have to look carefully at the bottom of the ocean. If c9d1549cdd

Airship Asunder was an airship program proposed in 1979 by the Republic of Singapore Air Force (RSAF), Republic of Singapore Navy (RSN) and Asian Development Bank (ADB) to "ensure that air power is retained as a viable option in local defence" despite the emergence of "jet aircraft as the war-winning weapon." When it was announced, the goal was to give the RSAF the capability to protect the entire country, although the scheme lacked any further detailed mission, payload, or crewing requirements. The program was to be funded by a host of budgetary supports, with the portion dedicated to military procurement split between the RSAF and RSN. After a series of design changes, production of the Gandra began around 1984. A variant, the Vigorous Spear was developed, which would further enable strikes deep into enemy territory. Dealing with cost and complexity restraints, the program was cancelled in 1987, with early aspects and components of the program's designs incorporated into new airships. Origins The RSAF's inability to procure the newer generation of helicopters to augment its military capabilities led to the Airship Asunder project, the goal of which was "to retain the capability to rapidly deploy a defensive air umbrella to protect all parts of the island, to rapidly deploy ground troops to the forward area of operations, and to protect our naval groups moving ashore." Described as a "state of the art airship," Airship Asunder was among the airship modernization projects of the late 1970s and early 1980s, comprising a series of advanced fleet airships and their supporting infrastructure that, as with Taurus and Invincible, were to be based on British concepts. In May 1979, the RSAF struck a deal with British industrial giant, Rolls-Royce to research aircraft engine development. From then, a decade of consultations on new propulsion options for its airships took place, with Rolls-Royce analyzing new turbine designs and General Electric investigating alternative turbofan designs, all the while seeking the services of former Rolls-Royce specialist Mr. R. Ellis - a former British aircraft and airship test pilot. Ultimately, Rolls-Royce proposed a new turbofan engine design, known as the Rolls-Royce Pegasus, for RSAF consideration. On 19 May 1979, Rolls-Royce chose BAE Systems of the United Kingdom to manufacture the propulsion system, with an option for Rolls-Royce itself to construct engines for the
