However, the phenotypes of MLNA2-associated cerebellar ataxia are currently unknown. Here, we report on a patient with MLNA2-associated cerebellar ataxia, with onset in childhood, presenting with developmental delay, dysarthria, ataxic gait, and cerebellar signs. He developed strabismus and did not show signs of pyramidal tract involvement. To study the phenotype, additional patients with MLNA2-associated cerebellar ataxia were identified, and were clinically, genetically and neurophysiologically assessed. The new variant of ataxia was characterized by earlier onset (median age of onset 3 years), milder gait ataxia, and spastic-ataxic-like dysarthria. The findings in this study revealed some of the phenotypic characteristics of MLNA2-associated ataxia.Boron is a trace element which, in excess, has been known to cause significant health problems. In particular, boron has been found to cause spasm and cardiac damage in humans and animals. Boron is naturally found in certain foods, such as fruits and vegetables, and the body uses it to synthesize the hormone insulin. Boron is typically supplied in dietary supplements as an oxide. Field of the Invention The invention relates generally to a method and apparatus for detecting and registering sheet materials moving along a conveyor past sensors used to measure and register the distance between the moving sheet and the surface of the moving conveyor. The invention is specifically designed for on-line registration of paper towels and other sheet materials, such as magazines, catalogues and the like. 2. Description of the Prior Art One of the most critical parameters affecting the efficiency of a papermaking operation is the ability to automatically control the rate of flow of freshly delivered sheet stock along a papermaking machine. Such control insures the delivery of a uniform stream of stock to the various papermaking stations and downstream finishing devices. Since a typical modern commercial sheet-forming apparatus generally operates at speeds in excess of 300 feet per minute, it is necessary to run the stock-receiving machinery at a rate sufficient to insure the production of sheets of stock of uniform thicknesses. To do so, it is essential to detect the actual speed at which the sheet material is being moved along the conveyor to insure that the rate of feeding stock to the papermaking machine is in fact controlled to the desired rate. In the past, the speed of a conveyor has been detected on a pass-by basis by sensing the position of the leading edge of the sheet material as it approaches the sensor. It is obviously critical that the sensor is placed in close proximity to the conveyor so that the position of the leading edge

The plan calls for the terrifical eradication of the information technology to liberate people from the precarious status quo. Peter Duesing, all alone, sleeps in his room in this photo from 1964. The ideal consumer produces consumer goods, and economic growth is based upon consumer demand. The driver is the commodity need of the highest income groups. The goal is the creation of a gantic exposure of the residents of society, and those residents are corporations and banks. The plan simply invites people to increasingly speculate in oneside of the residents in contrast to their own consumption. There are two main steps. The first is the cancel
