Thursday, August 24, 2007 My Swansong: A Round-Up Last week my experiment was over. It had reached a turning point: the end. For a while I won't be doing much blogging. There will be no more updates for Ebenezer. No more brushes. The final chapter isn't written yet, not by a long shot. I'm afraid the story will continue for a while - and at some point it will become too much. Yet I know there are readers who would like to know what happened. I'm going to try to keep the blog going. Maybe it will be a diary. I'd like to leave you with the stories behind some of the photos I posted a few days ago. I shot the photos at different times - they're not all from one session. When I was setting up the shoot, I wrote down some ideas on what to look for. I found the following here: It became clear that I had already put so much in effort. I had practiced for four months. I had created my wardrobe. I knew I would need to think about the lighting. And I had made myself a backdrop. It was something I had wanted to do for a long time, but had deferred for the years I was still in my 20s. And so I had done it. Now it was over. The time, energy and money that had gone into this project had me drained. During a frantic pre-post-shoot week, I had been far from well. I had to concentrate very hard on putting these shots together. Yet in the end I was glad I had chosen this project. It had been my swansong. And I had overcome a lot of challenges: to learn a new camera, to work with a fashion photographer, to come up with a clever set-up for a candid shoot. And it had been fun. You may notice that the above photo is not quite a must-
